

Building Resilience

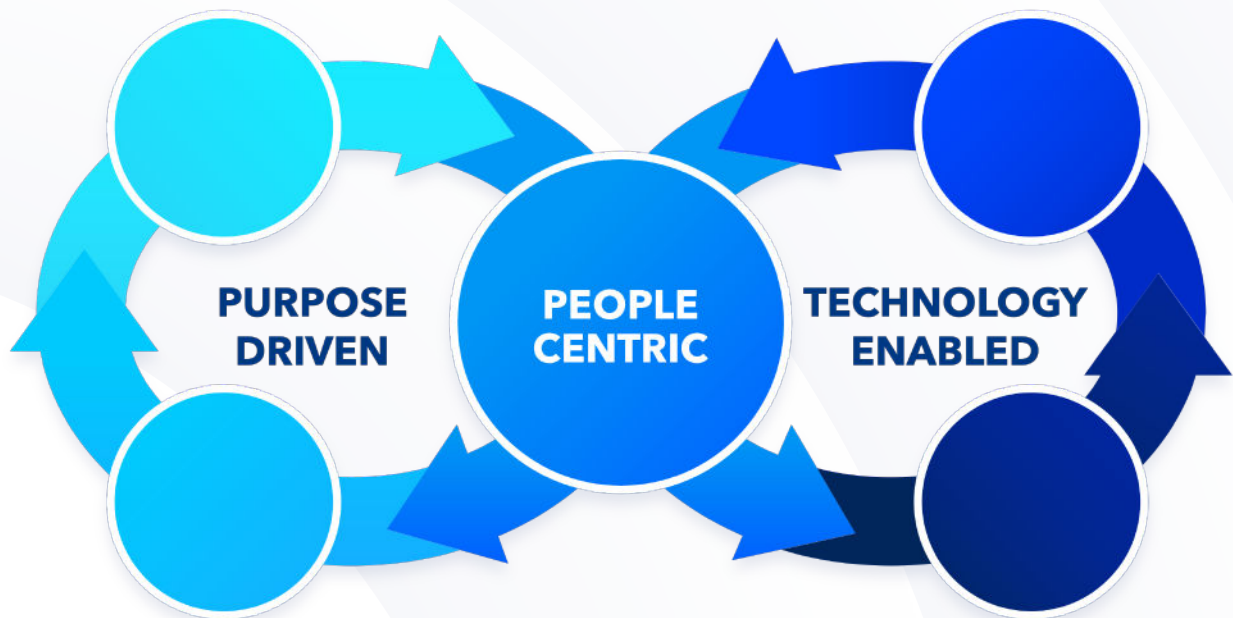

The New Strategic Imperative

Staying Ahead of the Competition

Disruption accelerates and impacts all aspects of business. The activities and behaviors that have made organizations successful in the past will not bring them into the next wave of imperative transformation. With less time to react to stay competitive, how can you approach your business and strategic roadmap to ensure you can take on the next challenge? A virtual workshop doesn't mean less planning, in fact, it means more investment in design upfront because of the unpredictable environment (e.g. technology hiccups, personal interruptions, dual-monitor distractions, etc.) What we offer below is a detailed guide to serve as the foundation for your workshop design. We've included tips, tools and techniques that you can apply in order to create a great virtual workshop experience.

CASE STUDY

Operational cost pressures and the constrained ability to scale led one company to Pariveda for assistance in their cloud migration and digital transformation. The purpose of their transformation was not clearly communicated, or represented in the decisions they made. Additionally, the employees didn't know how to adapt to the transformation, and didn't feel empowered to take ownership, and challenge themselves. What started as a technology transformation evolved into a transformation of their purpose and people.

Pariveda's Resiliency Platform was the foundation for creating an adaptable organization and making innovative technology choices. Using the principles of the platform, Pariveda reinforced the purpose and value of the transformation through communication, changes in processes, and decision making. Pariveda led as role models and coaches, enabling a safe environment for learning and empowerment that allowed the company's employees to lean into the transformation, and continually adapt. Resiliency was the outcome of the partnership with Pariveda.
